SIR, — The following instance of the spirit travelling during the sleep of the body, has been related to me by the Baroness von Vay: —

A lady, who is a friend and neighbour of the Baroness, and who was near her first confinement, had begged the Baroness to come and mesmerise her when the event should occur. One evening, at a late hour, the husband sent his carriage to the Baron von Vay, with a request that he would send his doctor to the lady, who was very ill. The Baroness was just retiring to rest. Not being able to go to her friend, she said to her husband, “Let us pray fervently for poor Mrs. N., and I will send my spirit to mesmerise her.” This was about eleven o’clock, p.m. The Baroness fell asleep quickly, and about the same hour Mr. N. saw the Baroness standing in the bay window of his room. She said to him, “Fear nothing; your wife will have a fine boy this night.” Mr. N. was rather astonished, but believed the Baroness had come with the doctor in his carriage. On turning round, he saw the Baron, who only waved his hand, and disappeared. Mr. N. then went into the yard, and inquired of the servants, “When the Lady von Vay had arrived?” They thought he must be out of his mind, as the hour was late, and no one but the doctor had come, and that in Mr. N.’s own carriage.

The event turned out as predicted. This is the third time the spirit “double” of the Baroness is reported to have been seen, each time by a different person.

The Baroness concludes by saying, “I often heal my patients by evoking their spirits, and mesmerising them.”
